BABY BUNTING NOT NAUGHTY

TAWYER PARSONS SUMMING UP THE BREACH-OF-PROMISE SUIT.

The Coffee Merchant Hears a Good Word for Himself, but Does Not Look on Bunnie-His Counsel Presents Him as the Perfect Lover, and Asserts That Miss Campbell Was Mercenary.

There was a round dozen of representatives of the fair sex in Part IV, of the Supreme Court at 10.30 o'clock this morning when "dear Bunnie" entered court with a female friend and her patriarchal lawyers, Messrs. Fullerton and Jordan.

Female heads gravitated together couples instantly, and there was such a whispering as one hears in church when the proud Miss McBride and her new bonnet sail proud Miss McBride and her new bounet said down the aisle.

Miss Clara Campbell, spinster and plaintiff,

Miss Clara Campbell, spinster and plantin, was becomingly meek and solemn in mien. She took her accustomed seat at the table common to the lawyers on both sides.

Fresently the florid Charles Arbuckle, bachelor of fifty-five and defendant, entered. He was scrupulously neat in attire. His hair bachelor of fifty-five and defendant, entered. He was scrupulously neat in attire. His hair was divided exactly in the middle and his mustache curled about his full lips.

He seated himself directly opposite and under the steady gaze of Miss Campbell, whose heart has suffered a pang computed by her to be worth $160,000.

His eyes were not as steady. He looked at Miss Campbell's lawyers; he looked at the Bunnie," and it was evident that the blue eyes of the plump plaintiff were scorching his already red face.

Mr. Justice Beach relieved the defendant by taking his seat on the wool sack and by taking his seat on the wool-sack, and Dounsellor Parsons took away the attention of the female spectators by beginning his ad-tress to the jury.

Mr. Parsons proceeded on the line mapped out. He tried to show that Mr. Arbuckle was a model lover and affianced, that he wanted to marry Miss Campbell. but that fortuitous circumstances com-put that fortuitous circumstances com-pelled many postponements of the nuptials, and that Miss Campbell, linally, fearing that her catch might get off per hook by dying, brought this suit for treach of promise, not in defense of her haracter, but for the money which she hoped b get from the estate of her dying lover. He claimed that the $500 certificate of de-losit sent to the plaintiff after the failure of ter father in business was accommanded by a or father in business was accompanied by a liquest that she come on to New York, not some as she was wont to travel, but with her star Emma, that he and she might come to a understanding of their position. But Miss amphell instead used the money to begin to shift.

short, he claimed that Mr. Arbuckle In short, he claimed that Mr. Arbuckle and never broken his made contract to marry her, and was ready, except for his illness, to do so, when she took the matter into court.

Miles of paper, he said, were used in the correspondence, and when Mr. Arbuckle wrote complaining that she did not write to him often enough and did not answer his questions, she replied: "I have written thirteen more words than you," and then ladds, "but I inclose several nice hugs and kisses to you."

adds, "but I inclose several nice hugs and kisses to you."

At this time Mr. Arbuckle was so sick that he was obliged to have a couch in his office to lie down many times a day when his strength gave out. He never failed to send words of endearment and love in his letters. So constant was he that he had incurred the ridicule of ex-Judge Fullerton, a master of the art.

the art. Mr. Parsons went on:

Having consulted her lawyer, Miss Campbell writes a love letter to Mr. Arbuckle, who is on his sick bed in Pittsburg. Not content, and fearing that it would not reach him and be of service in this suit, she registers a second letter to him. He answers immediately from all sick bed. On April 1, 1884, he writes again, while he is so ill that he is tobliged to sit down on the sidewalk from exhaustion after an effort to walk two blocks.

Obliged to sit down on the sidewalk from exhaus— lion after an effort to walk two blocks.

After that she has no desire to see Mr. Arbuckie. It is then Mr. Jerdau who is anxious to Berve the papers in this suit before Mr. Arbuckie dies. Women cannot marry dead men! Dead men cannot be sued!

Mr. Parsons read a letter from Miss Campbell to her lawyer, Mr. Hutchins, of Portsmouth, O., dated March 13, 1884, in which she says: "I wrote Saturday to Mr. A. to call. I wrote again Tuesday, and received an answer saying he would write. I got the letter to-day and it is inclosed." Mr. Parsons Baid:

Baid:

That letter was full of love, and what was its response? The answer was: "Suit has been brought for $100,000 damarcs to Miss Campbell's heart," I am an old-lashioned man, but I never yet heard of the breach of an engagement between persons of the social position of these parties when the time of the breach could not be definitely determined by the return of the engagement ring.

She never returned the $610 ring with which Mr. Albuckle scaled their engagement.

Here is a woman who has been careful to keep cooles of her own letters and to keep all of his letters, that they might be read and her lover held up to ridicale for the very words of endearment which he employed in addressing her.

Why, Mr. Arbuckle can't leave this courtoom without hearing his words of endearment, the symbols of the tenderest passion, jeered at him, and he is laughed at for the noblest sentiment of life.

Mr. Parsons insignuated that ex Judge Full

Mr. Parsons insinuated that ex-Judge Ful-

Mr. Parsons insinuated that ex-Judge Fullerton had called Mr. Arbuckle as the first witness, not because he was necessary to the case, but to get him early into ridicule through the newspapers, and that the suit was brought in New York rather than in Ironton because Miss Campbell's character was better known in her own Ohio town.

He contended that with Miss Campbell there had never been a question of damage to the heart. It had always been a question of marriage to her, and her affections received no damage.

Mr. Parsons tald one or two little stories d no damage. Parsons told one or two little stories calculated to coliven his argument, but there was never a smile on the faces of the twelve was never a smile on the faces of the twelve men in the bex, and they persistently stared in a stony fashion at nothing.

Mr. Parsons spoke two and a half hours, and, if the faces of the jurymen were not masked, there was little comfort for Mr. Arbuckle among them.

Mr. Arbuckle essayed the rôle of unre-warded virtue during the regisal of his side. od virtue during the recital of his side of the story by his counsel, and the plaintiff held a handkerchief over her face, which was removed intermittently, displaying red and weeping eyes. Hamilton Willcox, the apostle of equal rights for women, smiled sardonically.

The court-room was crowded full, however, when Mr. Fullerton began.

According to Mr. Fullerton, Miss Campbell is unsupported by friends. Her white haired father, after a long life of honest endeavor, stricken with financial failure, is at home ill. She is without means or friends, and the jury is depended on to right her.

"Bunnie" hid her swollen, weeping eves in her handkerchief, and the gay Lothario who has trifled with her tender heart looked guilty and cast down.

Ex-Judge Fullerton talked in the tone of the minister of the Gospel over a coffin and among mourners. He described her trip to Europe to study music.

"The defendant had not the courage to assert aught against her conduct while in a

The defendant had not the courage to assert aught against her conduct while in a foreign land," said the "dvocate, solemnly, punctuating with his index finger pointed at the blinking Mr. Arbuckle. "They have insinuated that there might have been"—" Who said that?" asked Mr. Parsons.
"You said it in your address! There's your answer," retorted Mr. Fullerton, indignantly.

He next described the courtship and re-marked, on the subject of quinine and whiskey:

The largest coffee merchant on this continent under the influence of quimne and whiskey! Where are his brothers to testify that he was mentally incompetent to make a contract for a wife as well as for a sack of coffee? But he bought a $60 ring for her! What on earth did he do that for if he didn't know he was eng ged? Miss Campbell rode all about Brooklyn making calls in his equipage. Hadn't the funes of whiskey and quinine left him sufficiently that he knew he was engaged then?

and quinine left him sufficiently that he knew he was engaged then?

There never has been since the time when Adam made that miserable excuse that the woman had tempted him and he did cat a more cowardly defense by man than the defense of Charles Arbuckle of his letters apprising the parents of this plaintiff of their engagement, that she had absolutely compelled him to write it.

Judge Beach is now delivering his charge to the jury.

PRILADELPHIA, Jan. 9.—Capt. George H. Eastman, National Organizer of the Machinery Constructors' District Assembly, K. of L., No. 198, who came to Philadelphia on Saturday with the purpose of meeting the General Executive Board of the Knights of Labor and enlisting its aid for the Reading strikers, returns to Pottsville to-day.

He visited Secretary Hayes yesterday, and t was his intention to visit the General Excutive Board to-day, but was informed that a quorum of the Board could not be brought together before Wednesday and probably not this week, as the members were very much scattered.

It is understood, however, that notices have been issued to the members of the Board informing them of the circumstances surrounding the strike and advising them that their presence is desired in the city this week to listen to what the representatives of the strikers may have to say to them.

CRAZED BY HIS BEAUTY.

A New York Girl Infatuated With Kyrle Bellew.

She Declares in Boston that He Proposed Marriage.

one Registered at the Parker House as Miss H. E. Stafford and Says the Actor India cated that He Wanted to Marry Her by a Gesture on the Stage-She Followed Him to the Thentre Each Night, but Has Been Persuaded to Return to New York.

Boston, Jan. 9.-A pretty young woman from New York was at the Parker House last week who was very much interested in the movements of Mr. Kyrle Bellew, who was Mrs. Brown-Potter's chief support during her engagement at the Globe Theatre. When the company went away the girl, who

too, probably to her home in New York. It was a very singular case. The girl was evidently deranged. She thinks that one night in a performance during the New York engagement Mr. Bellew grossly insulted her engagement Mr. Bellew grossly insulted her by a peculiar gesture. She has an idea that he meant marriage, and she expressed the determination that he should either marry her or apologize. She wanted to engage private detectives to investigate the case for her and find out just what the handsome actor intended she should understand by the action. She was in the audience, and she is convinced that he was struck by her appearance and forthwith "proposed" in the gesture to which she refers. The girl is evidently well off. She had a large amount of money with her. She remained at the Parker House during the entire engagement of the company and talked of nothing else the whole week. She stated that her parents lived near the Hotel Windsor in New York and were very wealthy.

which was the Hotel Windsor in New York and were very wealthy.

An effort was made to ascertain who they were, that they might be notified of their daughter's whereabouts and behavior, but as she had given an assumed name, and was very careful not to drop any remark that might give the desired information or a clue to it, nothing could be done with her; but she was finally persuaded to promise that she would return to New York.

She said that the matter was preying upon her mind, and if she did not get some satisfaction it might unbalance her intellect, which it had evidently done already.

She carried a revolver, and it was feared that she might create a scene in the theatre, so she was closely watched every night.

Those who took an interest in the matter were sure that she had left her revolver in her trunk before they would let her go to the theatre.

She was treated with the attempts the land as the property of the streated with the primost kindness.

about it, however, and the arguments seemed to have little effect.

Of course the whole thing was purely imaginary, and Mr. Bellew never as much as saw the girl in his life. The girl was only twenty-one years old, and had evidently been carried away by his appearance.
